Chapter 1 by Story Wars

"Good night." Josefina muttered under her purple mosaic blanket. And when the lights went off, she automatically swept into a coma she wouldn't wake from for a long, dreary period.

When her eyes opened, she closed them again as the sun leaked into her eyes. She squinted, and got up, discovering herself on a beach, plastered with small dark rocks, and a few seashells, some that she could name off of her head, and some she'd never seen before. She was wearing a plain, white dress and a dirty purple colored shirt, with some holes. Unsure of where to leave, she trotted towards the only direction she could actually move in: Forwards. She walked, her small, slender feet tapping against the new wild environment. Without knowing, she had trotted into a forest. Dark leaves covered the forest, not letting any of the blinding sunlight in, leaving the forest a dark and sorrow place. "This is a nice place to rest." She yawned, and inclined herself against a tree, a dark, and slender tree, with a leafy top. Feeling tired, her eyelids forcibly closed. Thinking that resting in the forest, was her biggest mistake.

When she woke up, she wasn't in the familiar forest anymore.
